_ServAll Building Service_s   Owner * Blake Peebles 901.387.7516

If my business has been exposed to the Covid 19 or Corona Virus can I just clean my building on my own?

While the Centers for Disease Control does not prohibit this, there is a general risk of reinfection if you are not familiar with the protocols or the strength of commercial cleaning and the disinfectant processes required to ensure the area is safe for re-entry by your customers and employees.

By not following these guidelines thoroughly, you potentially risk not complying with the industry requirements to ensure your business is sanitized and could cause cross-contamination and other high-risk measures that further delay your business from re-opening.

There is a process to cleaning the Corona Virus which includes both commercial cleaning and the sanitization of the area. There are also areas that you may not consider that also need to be professionally cleaned. If you use the wrong cleaning ingredients or administer them to surfaces in the wrong manner (such as a spray aerosol which would force the virus into the air and cause it to travel and contaminate other surfaces, or those you have already cleaned).

The products used to clean, disinfect and sanitize your business are approved and recommended by the CDC.

Our employees wear the proper equipment to ensure there is no cross-contamination

The cleaning procedures we use to sanitize the Corona Virus are those recommended by the CDC

Don't trust just any company to clean, disinfect and sanitize your businesses. Contact a professional cleaning company such as ServAll who keeps up-to-date on the latest requirements for sanitization and disinfected of areas exposed to Covid 19.

ServAll offers professional cleaning service, sanitization, and industrial strength disinfectant, and complies with current industry protocols to include the Centers for Disease and Prevention Control which include those guidelines on the proper methods to treat an area exposed to Covid 19, also known as Corona Virus.